To whom it may concern,

I can understand the government dragging Microsoft to court for unfair pricing of its OS's. But making Microsoft share or strip down its code is unfair. I have used Novell, Linux, Dos, Windows, and NT os's. I have found that most unwanted pieces of these systems can be removed or uninstalled with no ill effects to the system.

Computer users in the United States have made their choice, and chosen Microsoft products. If I buy a computer with Windows installed on it and want to try a different os I simply remove Windows. Until someone builds a better os then Windows, Windows will be the top seller. If the people so choose...

And please remember its the consumer that has made the choice not a State or govenment group. Instead of wasting time and resources picking on Microsoft why don't these companies, states, and the government move on to more productive issues. Hmm maybe design a better os. Feed hungry people in different states in the US, or protect citizens in this country from outside influences.

We the people are not as stupid as some of you think. We have made our choice. And Microsoft is the winner. A good product at a fair price is the American way of life.

Thanks for your time.
